The deadliest disease of the Medieval Age was the Black Death. It may have killed as many as half of the population of Europe. Medieval doctors were helpless against the Black Death. The Black Death struck first in England and the Scots said 'it had befallen them through the revenging hand of God'. They called it 'the foul death of England'. The Scots planned to take advantage of the situation by invading England when the Black Death struck north of the border.

Black Death - Medieval life - Scotland's History

During the early months of 1349, Scottish soldiers engaged in border warfare praised God that many of their English opponents were being felled by a new and terrifying affliction. Within months, however, Scots themselves began to fall victim to what they had described as "the foul death of the English." No aspect of life went untouched by this virulent disease. Beyond the physical devastation caused, Karen Jillings also describes the social impact of the plague—cynicism towards the Church ...
