Segmentation of patterns of curves and strokes associated with character shape geometry is a challenging task while developing Optical Character Recognition System for Indic scripts. Even though all Indic scripts are derived from a single entity, large amount of dissimilarities exist between northern and southern scripts. Complex conjunct formations add further complexity in the character ...

Segmentation of a word into characters is one of the important challenges in optical character recognition. This is even more challenging when we segment characters in an offline handwritten document. Touching characters make this problem more complex. In this paper, we have applied water reservoir based technique for identification and segmentation of touching characters in handwritten ...

Character segmentation is the fundamental process in character recognition approaches, which rely on isolated characters. The accuracy of the text recognition system heavily depends on character segmentation. All the techniques that already exist do not work well when the document contains distorted characters. Special care on "Matra" is needed to segment distorted characters. In this ...

Resuming from checkpoints for classification scripts 3 d-li14 commented Sep 24, 2018. Hi, thanks for the great code! I wonder do you have plans to support resuming from checkpoints for classification? As we all know, in terms of training ImageNet, the training process is really long and it can be interrupted somehow, but I haven't notice any code related to "resume" in ... form well for complex scripts. This calls for a general-ized solution that achieves a one shot segmentation that is globally optimal. This paper describes one such solution based on the optimization problem of spectral partitioning which makes the decision of proper segmentation based on the spectral properties of the pairwise similarity matrix. The solution described in the paper is shown to ...

Rule based segmentation of lower modifiers in complex ...

Abstract— Segmentation of whole characters in Indian scripts is a rather tricky problem. This is because in Indian scripts the characters have modifiers which could be subscripts, superscripts, attached or nonattached vowel signs to the front or following the character forming a complex composite character. Often a character is composed of several sub-characters. Unlike other South Indian ...
